Geneal said she would like to thank Darrin Smith for his enlightening presentation on Logan. He had a lot of material that he couldn't get to because of the preparations for the Mountain Meadows trip. We would like to see him return and be our speaker again.

She thanks Mel Milgrom for all the work he had to do organizing the trip to Mountain Meadows. We appreciate all the details and foresight he has gone to.

Those members absent really missed out on a good presentation by Darrin and an excellent trip to Southern Utah.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

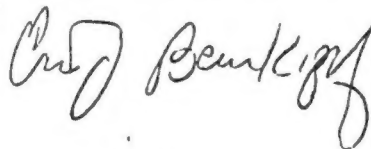

Dear NUTS members,

I'm sorry I could not make the last meeting. I hope Darrin Smith provided everyone with some interesting, historical information about Logan. Our May speaker will be Chuck Morris. Chuck has done quite a bit of gold nugget shooting over the past couple of years, and has some nice specimens to look at. He runs Chuck's Enterprises in North Salt Lake and has a complete line of various types of metal detectors. I want to know where he finds those nuggets! Chuck's talk should provide us with new ideas and get the blood pumping. Be careful because gold fever is very catchy!

We had a very good turnout for our Mountain meadows massacre dig. I think I personally counted over 30 people there on Saturday morning. The state archeologist gave us a very interesting report on the critical events of the massacre. As of this writing I really don't know all that was found. Maybe some of the members can enlighten us at the next meeting. I found two horseshoes and other assorted pieces of junk. K.S.L. (channel 5) was there and the club did get on the news on Saturday night. I would like to sincerely thank Mel Milgrom for putting this dig together. I know he has spent lots of his time coordinating all of it. Everything went very smoothly. Thanks again Mel, not many people would go to the trouble that you did.

The Frisco dig is coming up on Memorial day. People that plan to attend should also go out to Newhouse, it's not too far away and it has some potential. Please try to get out and advertise for our upcoming token show. It's only one month away. Tell all your friends, relatives, and neighbors about it. See you at the meeting.

Sincerely, Eric J. Bernkopf

FRISCO

Frisco, born in 1876, after the chance discovery of silver and lead ores in 1875, nestles in the southern tip of the San Francisco mountains, from which comes its name. Two slightly varying accounts tell of the origin. According to one, two prospectors, James Ryan and Samuel Hawkes, were working a small claim and they passed by a limestone ledge every day from their camp to their workings. Finally, one day, they hiked up to the ledge, chipped some pieces from it, found silver-bearing galena and knew they had something good. The other story has the same two men passing by the ledge on the way from Pioche to possibly Alta or Park City to participate in those booms. At any rate after sinking a 25 foot shaft through almost solid ore, as typical prospectors, they thought they had best get out while they could. In early 1876 they sold the claim for $25,000 and thought they were getting a steal.

The new owners called it the Horn Silver mine and shortly began to realize values of $100 per ton. The new town developed rapidly; mining merchants and drifters came in by the hundreds. Other mines were struck, the Carbonate, Rattler, Golden Reef and Grampion, each having its own smelter. Charcoal ovens were built to serve the smelters, using the various kinds of cedar, dwarf pine, mountain mahogany and sagebrush.

Because of the lack of water, the town "needed" 23 saloons to wash down the dust. With that kind of a start Frisco was soon known as the wildest town in the Great Basin. Killings were commonplace and the "meat wagon" made especially heavy hauls after payday. Water was freighted in with supplies or brought from Wah Wah Springs to the west and sold door to door.

In 1879, the well-known banker Jay Cooke and some Salt Lake City interests bought the Horn Silver mine for $5 million, then persuaded the Utah Southern Railroad to build an extension to Milford and up to Frisco. This was accomplished in 1880, which made ore shipments to the Salt Lake Valley smelters more economical than processing them in town.

Water was brought in tank cars from Black Rock and supplies from Salt Lake City. The only trouble with the railroad was it brought in even more gamblers, night ladies and such. From 1880-85 some 6000 people lived in town. Houses and shops were built on all the level places plus up on the hillsides. Numerous general and specialty stores were booming. There was a hotel with a basement dance hall which also served for town meetings, political rallies and church services. A schoolhouse and weekly paper, The Frisco Times, were busy. The hospital was also quite active as underground temperatures were high and miners suffered from various illnesses aggravated by their work.

Frisco is a far cry from the 1870 hey-days but remains as one of Utah's most intact and ghostly abandoned towns. Numerous buildings, in various states of decay, and store shells dot the townsite.

Fifteen miles on State Highway 21 west from the center of Milford is a short dirt road leading off to the right (north-west) into the business district of Frisco. Five beehive-shaped charcoal kilns sit brooding over empty stone walls, derelict equipment and remains of a mill. Railroad grades run in several directions. A block and a half further west along the highway a well marked railroad grade leads into the mining section of town. Several ancient frame stores and houses are dug into the hill, while more sturdy buildings, shutters creaking in the wind, sit down on the tailings dumps. A most fascinating place.

FRISCO

Our annual Frisco trip is scheduled for May 25-27. Meet at the Redwood Multi Purpose Center at 8:30 May 25 if you want to travel in a caravan. It should be a fun trip. See you there.
